

Employment Contracts MasterClass

Employment contracts form the foundation of the employment relationship and provide a framework for the obligations, entitlements, expectations and restrictions of both the employer and the employee. Having an employment contract is important, but it is even more important that the employment contract is enforceable in a court of law. If an employer does not have a valid employment contract in place it will be very costly when the employment relationship ends. That is when the employment contract is put under a microscope. Since the law is continually evolving a termination clause drafted two years ago may very well be unenforceable and exposing you to costly common law damages.

Learning about employment contracts can help mitigate your risk as an employer. In the online self-paced training, you will have a good understanding how employment contracts are viewed from a legal perspective, and how a small oversight can have disastrous consequences.
